35 high ranking members of Iraq's Interior Ministry have been arrested over the past three days, including Director of Internal Affairs General Ahmed Abu Rafeef and three others generals. The arrests were coordinated through Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki's counterterrorism force.

Top security officials say there is significant evidence that those arrested were linked to Al-Awda, the remnant of Saddam Hussein's Ba'ath Party. The arrests netted "huge amounts of cash," according to an unnamed Interior Ministry official, who said the party had been bribing officers to recruit them.

Though there was no official comment from Prime Minister Maliki's office, one of his advisers alleged that those arrested were involved in a "conspiracy." More arrests are expected.
