Zbigniew Brzezinski, an originating Trilateralist along with David Rockefeller and Henry Kissinger, has called for the European Union to step up to the plate and increase its involvement in Ukraine.

"If the EU is serious about playing a role in the world, it has to start here. And that means putting up the money to help stabilize Ukraine's teetering economy," Brzezinski told The World Post last month.

"Ukraine, a new and important space on the Eurasian chessboard, is a geopolitical pivot because its very existence as an independent country helps to transform Russia. Without Ukraine, Russia ceases to be a Eurasian empire," Brzezinski wrote in his 1997 book, The Grand Chessboard: American Primacy And Its Geostrategic Imperatives.

On Tuesday, the EU's economy boss, Olli Rehn, a Bilderberg attendee and also vice president of the European Commission, said the EU will soon lavish a nearly bankrupt Ukraine with cash as part of the ongoing effort to yank it out of the Russian orbit.

The EU, which has imposed austerity on its member states, will fork over 11 billion euros to the junta in Kyiv as part of a package cooked up by the International Monetary Fund.

Late last month the junta, led by former central banker Arseniy Yatsenyuk, voted to impose draconian austerity measures on the Ukrainian people as part of an IMF package designed to facilitate neoliberal looting of the economy and impoverish millions of Ukrainians.

Speaking from Athens, where the standard of living is set to fall by fifty percent by the end of the year as a result of EU and IMF-imposed austerity measures, Rehn said it "is in the interests of Ukraine and Europe to maintain peace and stability on our continent."

Meanwhile, NATO has announced it will advance "peace and stability" in Ukraine and Eastern Europe by stationing forces in the Baltic states and stepping up military exercises on Russia's border.

Rehn also admitted economic sanctions are unlikely to modify Russia's reaction to a hostile, partially fascist regime in Ukraine and provocative moves by NATO to ratchet up tension along its frontier. "As regards sanctions, no sensible European would want to see economic sanctions," he said.

Although the EU and the United States have attempted to impose sanctions on Russian and Crimean officials, it has stopped short of imposing wider economic sanctions on Russia, and for good reason – a large number of transnational corporations do business with the Russian Federation and anything more than token sanctions would have a negative impact of business.

In response to the threat of economic sanctions levied by the United States, last month Russia prepared "a bill that would freeze the assets of European and American companies operating in Russia," Press TV reported, a move that put a damper on sanctions called for by the United States and the European Union.

"It should be possible for Ukraine to develop closer economic and political ties with the EU and maintain good neighborly relations with Russia," said Rehn.

Good neighborly relations, however, will be difficult with the likes of Ukraine's former Prime Minister and convicted kleptocrat Yulia Tymoshenko telling her junta colleagues Russia should be nuked. Tymoshenko, who has announced her bid for the presidency, has made it her goal to disassociate Ukraine from Russia (despite its sizable Russian-speaking minority) and move the country into the grasp of the European Union where IMF austerity awaits average Ukrainians.

"Ukraine should be a part of the united Europe, a part of the European Union. I will do my best to achieve this goal. Ukraine's security should be ensured by means of integration into European security systems. I stand for Ukraine's participation in collective security systems," she said on Tuesday.

"European security systems" is doublespeak for NATO and its adversarial relationship with Russia.

Tymoshenko also said the referendum returning Crimea to Russia was unacceptable and she would do everything within her power if elected to nullify the will of the Crimean people. She said the junta in Kyiv stands for "further sanctions to force Russia give Crimea back."

"Ukraine should engage the best law experts to word (sic) its claims to Russia's overseas property, including on the territory of Ukraine," Tymoshenko said.

The former Prime Minister expressed her intransigence by stating she is against "any bargaining with Russia, especially on matters of the Ukrainian domestic policy."
