

But I Thought the Cold War was Supposed to Have Been About Ideology

By Eric Zuesse

Global Research, December 13, 2016

Region: Russia and FSU, USA

Theme: History, US NATO War Agenda

Was the Cold War against communism, or against Russia? Russia was our ally in World War II, and we'd have a Nazi world today if 26 million Russians hadn't died from Hitler's bombs and attacks while Russia fought on with courage amidst desperation, finally to crush his regime.

But Russia was communist, so the Cold War developed after that alliance (the Allies in WW II) ended. Then, Russia abandoned communism in 1990, and ended its own Warsaw Pact military alliance in 1991, while America's military alliance NATO expanded right up to Russia's borders — and yet the West claims that Russia and not NATO are the 'aggressor' here? Sorry: I don't get it. I really do not. Not at all.

The Cold War should have ended in 1991 when communism and the Warsaw Pact did, but instead it continued on in the form of NATO (very profitable for what Dwight Eisenhower called "the military-industrial complex" — and its U.S. military is also the employer, direct or indirect, of much of our workforce, especially when arms-manufacturers are counted in). And now Donald Trump is being called by haters-of-Trump (who are almost exclusively lovers-of-Hillary) a U.S. national-security risk because he wants to end the Cold War on the U.S. side — 25 years after it had ended in 1991 on the communist side. Oh, it's still too soon to do that? Really?

On December 12th, appeared a call for a re-do of the election (technically it was a letter to the CIA urging an immediate report to members of the Electoral College on whether Trump is a secret Russian agent or won by means of Russian manipulation of the election), and it was signed by 9 Electoral College electors for Hillary Clinton, and by 1 Electoral College elector for Donald Trump (the latter of whom, Chris Suprun of Texas, had written in the New York Times on December 5th pouring hatred against Trump and lauding George W. Bush, who "led us through the tragic days following the [9/11] attacks. His leadership showed that America was a great nation" — so we won't need to wonder what type of President he admires).

"The bipartisan electors' letter raises very grave issues involving our national security," Clinton campaign chair John Podesta said.

'Bipartisan' — my foot!

Democrats (the Party I left during Obama's second term, as he ratcheted-up fake charges against Russia, and cooperated with the neocons — most of whom then were Republicans — to bring the Cold War back to a boil) are trying every trick they can to un-do the election's result, and this is merely their latest such tactic.

The only valid claim they can make (but they don't) is that Hillary Clinton (she's their candidate — the Obama Administration's super-neocon and the bloodthirsty hawk who had famously said upon learning of Muammar Gaddafi's gory ending, "We came, we saw, he died. Ha ha!" — oh, wasn't that a wonderful victory 'we' can all be proud of!) beat Trump by 2% in the popular vote. But that claim is irrelevant under the Constitution. (We're supposed to be a nation under laws, under the U.S. Constitution — right?)

This isn't the first time in our nation's history when a President was elected who had lost the popular vote. Unless and until we amend our Constitution to impose a popular-vote Presidency (and so to remove the existing regional-state role in the selection of our President and Commander-in-Chief), Donald Trump won the 2016 election. Any Electoral College elector who was sworn prior to the election to vote for a candidate but who after having been elected on that basis, has gone turncoat against that candidate, is turncoat against our nation. He (or she) should consider, in this light, what he has done. He's turncoat not against Russia, but against America, and against the voters whom that person represents (or is supposed to represent). But, above all, he's turncoat against the Constitution itself, whose 12th Amendment says of members of the Electoral College:

... They shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President. ... The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President. ...

The presumption is that each person who "pledged" to vote there for a particular candidate will write that person's name onto one of the 538 ballots and hand it in to be counted for that person, once all of the 538 ballots have been collected and the final tally of the 538 is publicly counted in Congress, in Washington DC.

If Mr. Suprun fails to honor that commitment or "pledge," then his only punishment — if any — for having done so, will be his own conscience (presuming that he has any), but as far as the law is concerned, he will have committed no crime, and not even a misdemeanor, even though his action on that occasion (his vote in the Electoral College) will have violated his very solemn "pledge," on the very basis of which pledge he had acquired this awesome right, and extraordinary privilege, in our 'democracy'. As an Elector he represents around 600,000 voters, maybe none of whom have even heard his name, and yet he will be their lone voice in selecting America's next President

Though Suprun, and the nine other signatories (among the 538 Electoral College members), might actually believe that, as their letter says, this is about "a foreign power, namely Russia, [which] acted covertly to interfere in the presidential campaign with the intent of promoting Donald Trump's candidacy," it's really about America — what type of nation we really are, not what type of nation Russia is.

Investigative historian Eric Zuesse is the author, most recently, of They're Not Even Close: The Democratic vs. Republican Economic Records, 1910-2010, and of CHRIST'S VENTRILOQUISTS: The Event that Created Christianity.

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Eric Zuesse

About the author:

Investigative historian Eric Zuesse is the author, most recently, of They're Not Even Close: The Democratic vs. Republican Economic Records, 1910-2010, and of CHRIST'S VENTRILOQUISTS: The Event that Created Christianity.

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca

www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca