

Clinton Challenged to Break Up—and Break Up With—Wall Street Banks

Comments from progressive Senators Elizabeth Warren and Bernie Sanders, Clinton's chief rival, highlight former Secretary of State's ties to financial elite

By Lauren McCauley

Global Research, July 19, 2015

Common Dreams 18 July 2015

Region: USA

Theme: Global Economy, Religion

In-depth Report: U.S. Elections

Faced with the possibility of yet another Wall Street crony taking over the Oval Office next year, progressive lawmakers are directly challenging Democratic frontrunner Hillary Clinton to break up—and break up with—the big banks.

Speaking at an annual meeting for progressive organizers and advocacy groups on Friday, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) called on presidential hopefuls to support recently introduced legislation that would stem the ever-turning revolving door between government and the financial industry.

“We have a presidential election coming up. I think anyone running for that job—anyone who wants the power to make every key economic appointment and nomination across the federal government—should say loud and clear that they agree: we don’t run this country for Wall Street and mega corporations. We run it for people,”

Warren said, according to her prepared remarks, during the keynote address.

“So let’s turn that into something specific,” Warren told the thousands convened at the Netroots Nation annual convention, held this year in Phoenix, Arizona from July 16-19.

The new bill, introduced by Sen. Tammy Baldwin (D-Wis.) this week, “won’t fix everything, but it will throw some heavy sand in the gears of the revolving door—and it’s a bill any presidential candidate should be able to cheer for,” Warren said.

Image: Already Hillary Clinton’s campaign has pocketed about $300,000 from employees at the nation’s six largest banks. (Photo: Marc Nozell/cc/flickr)

As Nation columnist George Zornick notes, Warren’s address “can fairly be read as a direct challenge to Clinton,” who is known for her long-standing ties to Wall Street.

Indeed, the Wall Street Journal reported on Thursday that in her first few weeks as a presidential contender, Clinton’s campaign

“collected about $300,000 from employees at the nation’s six largest banks, with about $88,000 coming from Morgan Stanley executives alone, and about $62,000 from workers at J.P. Morgan Chase & Co.”

Speaking at a campaign event in Iowa on Friday, Clinton's primary challenger for the Democratic ticket, populist Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), advised reporters to "ask Hillary Clinton about her views on whether she thinks we should break up these large financial institutions. I do." He added, "You will have to ask her views on whether we should re-establish Glass-Steagall."

The New York Times reports:

Asked whether Mrs. Clinton would seek to break up the country's largest banks or reinstate Glass-Steagall, an aide to Mrs. Clinton said she would speak in more detail about both issues in the coming weeks. (Alan Blinder, an economist who is advising Mrs. Clinton, said this week that she would not attempt to revive Glass-Steagall.)

Further, the Times continues, "Sanders boasted that he had not received financial contributions from Goldman Sachs, which he said sought 'undue influence' in American politics." Of the $50,000 in donations the Clinton team has thus far received from employees of the Wall Street giant, Sanders said, "That's her decision."

The original source of this article is Common Dreams
Copyright © Lauren McCauley, Common Dreams, 2015

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Lauren McCauley

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca