It is no longer a conspiracy theory: In the course of this year's World Health Summit, Stefan Oelrich, CEO of pharmaceutical giant Bayer, referred to the mRNA jabs as “cell and gene therapy” in his speech.

Mockingly, he explained that if one had asked people two years ago about their willingness to be “injected with gene therapy”, a “95 percent rejection rate” would have been likely. In his speech he also emphasized the good cooperation with the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation to achieve a “sustainable” world – working together to reduce birth rates and shrink the world's population.

At the summit held from October 24 to 26, 2021, German Health Minister Jens Spahn, the EU Commission President Ursula von der Leyen, the WHO chief Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus and Bayer manager Oelrich addressed the audience. The latter described the experimental mRNA injections as “cell and gene therapy”.

Oelrich also made other interesting statements that revealed his end goal.

The Bayer chief is a member of the Board of Management of Bayer AG and has been Head of the Pharmaceuticals Department since November 2018. Previously, he was on the board of directors of Sanofi. From 1989 to 2011 Oelrich held various management positions at Bayer AG. He is also a member of the supervisory board of the Charité University Hospital in Berlin. So he has decades of experience in the pharmaceutical industry.

“We’re really making this leap – we as a company, Bayer – with cell and gene therapies... ultimately, the mRNA vaccines are an example of this cell and gene therapy. I always like to say, if we had done a public survey two years ago– ‘would you be willing to inject gene or cell therapy into your body?’ – we would probably have had a rejection rate of 95 percent,” said Oelrich.

In addition to gene therapy, Oelrich also mentioned the role that his company, together with other prominent institutions and personalities, has played in the implementation of contraceptives.

"We also have to concentrate on what is socially responsible outside of Europe and ensure that we act sustainably there. Last year we made a commitment to give one hundred million women around the world additional access to contraceptives. We invested 400 million this year in new facilities to manufacture long-acting contraceptives for women [...] Together with Bill and Melinda Gates we are working very closely on family planning initiatives," Oelrich revealed, indicating that one of the ways to achieve a "sustainable" world is to reduce the number of births and therefore the world's population.

Oelrich is in the service of the "Great Reset", the radical plan to establish world dictatorship. This was designed under the leadership of Klaus Schwab and the globalist elite who meet once a year at the World Economic Forum (WEF) in Davos, Switzerland. In the announcement of the "Great Reset", the WEF also wrote that the COVID-19 "pandemic" would be ideally suited to achieve this goal.

The Bayer chief added that the "silver lining" of the pandemic was that it "has shown how quickly we can radically change our lifestyle – almost immediately, the crisis forced companies and individuals to abandon practices that had long been considered indispensable, from frequent air travel to work in the office".

The World Economic Forum also recently published two articles advancing the notion of eating insects. European member states have now certified house crickets, yellow mealworms, and grasshoppers as food fit to be sold at supermarkets. These items will be cheaper than traditional sources of protein and will be sold in frozen, dried, and powdered forms, according to Bloomberg.
