

Former Colonies of the British Empire Want Diamonds Worth $800 Million Back From the Crown Jewels

By Poppy Bilderbeck

Global Research, September 12, 2022

Unilad 10 September 2022

Region: Europe
Theme: History, Law and Justice

All Global Research articles can be read in 51 languages by activating the "Translate Website" drop down menu on the top banner of our home page (Desktop version).

To receive Global Research's Daily Newsletter (selected articles), click here.

Visit and follow us on Instagram, Twitter and Facebook. Feel free to repost and share widely Global Research articles.

Calls have been growing for some of the Queen's crown jewels to be returned to India and Africa.

Queen Elizabeth II passed away on Thursday, 8 September at Balmoral Castle, Scotland. She was 96 years old.

While many have taken to the streets of London near Buckingham Palace, the area around Windsor Castle, as well as social media to pay their respects, others have spoken out about the colonial history of the country which the Queen served for 70 years.

In particular, people have been calling for the return of the Koh-i-Noor diamond which is currently set in the crown of the Queen Mother and is part of the Crown Jewels on display at the Tower of London and the Great Star of Africa set in the Sovereign's Sceptre, which is also part of the Crown Jewels.

'The Koh-i-noor diamond from India sits atop the crown made for the Queen Mother in 1937 and the Great Star of Africa sits in the Queen's scepter' pic.twitter.com/l1gZfmmrh5

— Madam Capital (@CapitalMadam) September 10, 2022

The Koh-i-Noor is one of the largest cut diamonds in the world coming in at just over 105 carats. It is said to be worth between $140 and $400 million, but is also hailed as priceless. It is also known as one of the world's most controversial diamonds too.

While it is believed to have first been mentioned over 5,000 years ago in a Sanskrit script, the diamond was referred to as the Syamantaka and subsequently who actually had ownership of it was simply speculation.

After that, for the next 300 years from the year of 1339, it stayed in the city of Samarkand.

The Koh-i-Noor remained in India until 1849, when British forces conquered the Punjab and it became part of the British East India Company.

It was then shipped back to Britain and, in July 1850, given to Queen Victoria.

The diamond became part of the crown jewels after Queen Victoria passed away.

please return stolen kohinoor diamond back to India so #QueenElizabeth can see heaven.#QueenElizabeth pic.twitter.com/dh8sAicTSI

— Dr House □ (@MK Chaudhary04) September 9, 2022

"Instead of returning plundered patrimony to its rightful owners, the British are clinging to stolen artefacts such as the Kohinoor diamond, which they embedded in the Queen Mother's tiara and shamelessly flaunt in the Tower of London," Tharoor said.

Calls have also grown for the Great Star of Africa – also known as Cullinan I and First Star of Africa – to be returned.

Africa Archives tweeted:

"Queen Elizabeth II owns the largest clear-cut diamond in the world known as the Great Star of Africa. The 530-carat gem was mined in South Africa back in 1905. It was stolen from South Africa. It has an estimated worth of $400 million.

Queen Elizabeth II owns the largest clear cut diamond in the world Known as 'The Great Star of Africa' the 530 carats gem was mined in South Africa back in 1905. It was stolen from South Africa. It has an estimated worth of $400 million. pic.twitter.com/HesTmGTv4d

— Africa Archives ™ (@Africa_Archives) September 8, 2022

Africa Archives tweeted: "Queen Elizabeth II owns the largest clear-cut diamond in the world known as the Great Star of Africa. The 530-carat gem was mined in South Africa back in 1905. It was stolen from South Africa. It has an estimated worth of $400 million.

"The British claim that it was given to them as a symbol of friendship and peace yet it was during colonialism. The British then replaced the name 'The Great Star of Africa' with name of Chairman of Mine 'Thomas Cullinan'."

*

Note to readers: Please click the share buttons above or below. Follow us on Instagram and Twitter and subscribe to our Telegram Channel. Feel free to repost and share widely Global Research articles.

Featured image is a collage from Unilad, image copyright Alamy Stock Photo

The original source of this article is Unilad Copyright © Poppy Bilderbeck, Unilad, 2022

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Poppy Bilderbeck

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca