When in doubt, it's Russia's fault, Vladimir Putin designated the West's No. 1 bad guy.

He's blamed for virtually anything Washington and NATO contrive. A longterm adversarial relationship persists, risking potentially devastating consequences.

Facts never interfere with Western propaganda, outrageous accusations featured with no corroborating proof.

The New York Times is the lead disseminator, mouthpiece for Washington and Hillary's campaign, journalistic ethics and principles discarded entirely - neocon/neoliberal credentials replacing them.

Citing an unnamed "federal law enforcement official," The Times accused Russia of hacking into Hillary's computer system. Her campaign blames Moscow for "trying to sway the outcome of the election," according to The Times, adding:

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, the fund-raising arm for House Democrats, also said on Friday that its systems had been hacked.

What happened

"appears to have come from an entity known as 'Fancy Bear,' which is connected to the GRU, the Russian military intelligence service, according to an official involved in the forensic investigation."

American intelligence agencies have told the White House they have 'high confidence' that the Russian government was behind the theft of emails and documents from the Democratic National Committee.

Russia appears to be the source of a hack into the Hillary Clinton campaign's computer system — the same intelligence agency behind the recent cyberattack on the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, a law enforcement official said Friday.

"It's the same adversary," the official told The New York Times. "These are sophisticated actors."

The Democratic group, which raises money for those running for the House, experienced an attack from a group known as "Fancy Bear," the Times reports.

Fact: Believe nothing US sources, the Clinton campaign and their media echo chamber report – especially from The New York Times, Hillary's press agent, conducting an ongoing campaign to get her elected in November.

Fact: Blaming Russia for virtually anything without verifiable proof is part longstanding Putin bashing.

He's vilified solely for political reasons, notably his support for nation-state sovereignty, diplomacy over force in resolving conflicts, and multi-world polarity – positions Washington opposes, irreconcilably opposite its hegemonic agenda.

The possibility of Hillary succeeding Obama next year should terrify everyone, energizing mass activism to stop her.

Her ruthless agenda includes endless wars of aggression. The issue in November is simple and unambiguous, without a shadow of a doubt: Hillary must be defeated! Humanity's fate depends on it!
