

Iraqi bishops reject annexing Christian areas by Kurds

By Global Research

Global Research, October 27, 2008

Azzaman 24 October 2008

Region: Middle East & North Africa

Theme: US NATO War Agenda

Iraqi bishops have urged their hard-pressed Christian communities to reject moves to annex their areas to the Kurdish autonomous regions.

The bishops made the statement following a meeting with Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki in which they expressed their fears for the fate of Christian existence in Iraq particularly in the northern city of Mosul and its suburbs.

The Province of Nineveh, of which Mosul is the capital, currently includes the largest remaining concentration of Christians in Iraq whose numbers have dwindled drastically since the 2003 U.S. invasion.

Asked whether they would prefer Christians to be part of the semi-independent Kurdish enclave in northern Iraq, Bishop Shlemoun Wardooni, the second highest ranking Christian cleric in Iraq, said:

"We do not want to be part of this (Kurdish enclave). We always want to be continuously associated with the central government. We want to live amid our brethren all over the country."

The comments are a blow to Kurdish moves to add the string of strategically situated Christian villages in the Nineveh plateau to their region.

The Kurds have occupied most of Christian areas and have deployed their militias inside Mosul.

Reports say more than half of Christians living in Mosul have fled in the past few weeks, some going to Syria and some seeking refuge in the remaining Christian monasteries and villages east and north of the city.

It is not clear who is behind the latest campaign of intimidation in which at least 14 Christians have been killed.

In their rush to flee, families have left behind almost everything including personal belongings.

The government has vindicated al-Qaeda and other anti-U.S. groups.

Maliki has blamed what he described as "a political plan aimed at exploiting the Christians."

Analysts say Maliki was referring to Kurds who openly consider Christians and their areas as part of their territory.

The Kurds have denied the accusations.

The original source of this article is Azzaman
Copyright © Global Research, Azzaman, 2008

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Global Research

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca