

Israel's Anti-Boycott Law is Racist, Anti-Democratic and Will Hit Palestinians Hardest, Rights Groups Warn

By Ali Abunimah Global Research, April 17, 2015 Electronic Intifada 16 April 2015 Region: Middle East & North Africa Theme: Law and Justice In-depth Report: PALESTINE

Law upheld by Israel's high court allows for stiff sanctions against those calling for boycotts in support of Palestinian rights. (Anne Paq / ActiveStills)

Israel's high court on Thursday upheld a 2011 law imposing stiff sanctions on those advocating boycotts of Israel or its colonial settlements in the occupied West Bank and Golan Heights.

The so-called Law for the Prevention of Damage to the State of Israel through Boycottallows entities to sue and win compensation from individuals or organizations that call for economic, cultural or academic boycott. It also allows the finance ministry to financially penalize any organization that receives state funding that participates in such calls.

The court threw out only one minor provision of the law, which would have allowed anyone to sue for boycott-related damages without showing proof they were harmed.

Sawsan Zaher, an attorney for Adalah – the Legal Center for Arab Minority Rights in Israel, said the law "harms Palestinians more than others because they are on the frontlines of struggling against the occupation and the violation of the human rights of their people under occupation in the West Bank and Gaza."

In a press release from Adalah, Zaher added that the law would also hit Palestinians in occupied East Jerusalem hard, as it would prevent them from using the "main civil protest tool of boycott to end the occupation."

Racist and anti-democratic

Adalah is one of eight civil society organizations that had petitioned against the law, along with the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, the Public Committee Against Torture in Israel, HaMoked – Center for the Defence of the Individual and Yesh Din.

Three petitioners are organizations that have actively promoted economic boycott as a means of pressure to end the occupation: the Coalition of Women for Peace, the Higher Follow-up Committee for Arab Citizens in Israel and the Jerusalem Legal Aid and Human Rights Center.

"The anti-boycott bill is one of a host of racist and anti-democratic legislation aimed at silencing opposition and curtailing the rights of the Palestinian minority," the Coalition of Women for Peace said in a statement condemning the court's decision.

It affirmed that "boycott is a worldwide recognized and legitimate nonviolent tool in struggles for social and political change." By allowing it to be outlawed, the court had "failed to protect the right of citizens to voice criticism of government policies."

"We will not be deterred from exposing and bringing to public discussion the economic interests driving the occupation," the Coalition of Women for Peace said. "We will continue resisting the occupation using all legitimate, nonviolent means."

The Coalition of Women for Peace initiated Who Profits, a project that researches and publishes information about corporations and other interests that profit from occupation.

In their challenge, the petitioners pointed out that the law was discriminatory, as it did not outlaw boycotts for purposes other than supporting Palestinian rights.

Israelis have successfully used consumer boycotts for a host of causes, for example in order to fight for lower cottage cheese prices.

Worse to come

The Coalition of Women for Peace warned that the decision foreshadows worse to come.

"With the absence of legal checks on political persecution in Israel, [Prime Minister Benjamin] Netanyahu's shocking comments on election day conveying racism and intolerance of dissent will without a doubt be written into law in the coming Knesset [parliament]," the group said.

The high court had effectively given "a green light to anti-democratic legislation such as the Nationality bill that seeks to anchor Israel's Jewishness in legislation," to a law "instituting a death penalty for Palestinians accused of terrorism" and to a ban on leftist organizations receiving donations.

Such bills are "already a negotiating chip" in the ongoing process of forming a coalition government since Israel's election last month.

The Coalition of Women for Peace urged the "international community" to condemn the attack on "freedom of expression," affirm that banning boycotts is "anti-democratic" and condemn Israel's "impunity as a so-called democracy despite its apparent disrespect of fundamental civil and human rights."

The original source of this article is Electronic Intifada Copyright © Ali Abunimah, Electronic Intifada, 2015

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca