

Jimmy Carter Offers to Meet with Kim Jong-un to Prevent War with North Korea

Carter wrote that his more than 20 years' worth of experience in dealing with the North taught him that what the country's leadership wants more than anything is direct talks with the U.S. that would lead to a permanent peace treaty.

By James Holbrooks

Global Research, October 13, 2017

The Anti-Media 11 October 2017

Region: Asia, USA

Theme: Intelligence

In-depth Report: NORTH KOREA

With tensions once again flaring up between the United States and North Korea, it was reported Tuesday that former U.S. president Jimmy Carter has offered to meet with leader Kim Jong-un to discuss ways to achieve peace.

The revelation comes by way of South Korean news outlet JoongAng Ilbo, which spoke with Park Han-shik, a prominent scholar on North Korean-related issues. Park previously helped Carter plan diplomatic trips to the country in 1994 and 2010.

JoongAng Ilbo writes that Park met with the former president at his home in Georgia on September 28, and it was there that Carter reportedly expressed his wishes.

"Should former President Carter be able to visit North Korea, he would like to meet with North Korean leader Kim Jong-un and discuss a peace treaty between the United States and the North and a complete denuclearization of North Korea," Park told the outlet, "and contribute toward establishing a permanent peace regime on the Korean Peninsula."

Earlier in September, while speaking before gatherers at his Carter Center in Atlanta, the former president was highly critical of the Trump administration, particularly in the area of foreign policy. Then, last week, Carter penned an editorial for The Washington Post in which he addressed North Korea directly.

Carter wrote that his more than 20 years' worth of experience in dealing with the North taught him that what the country's leadership wants more than anything is direct talks with the U.S. that would lead to a permanent peace treaty. Technically, the agreement to cease the Korean War in 1953 was only an armistice, and the two countries are still at war.

The former president says that, indeed, "the preservation of their regime" is priority one for the government in Pyongyang, and current strategies that attempt to de-escalate the situation are failing because the North Korean leadership "believes its survival is at stake."

Carter says what's needed now is for the U.S. to "send a high-level delegation to Pyongyang for peace talks or to support an international conference" of all the relevant regional players, including China.

In his piece, Carter doesn't nominate himself to lead such an effort, but if Tuesday's report out of South Korea is accurate, he seems willing to fill the role. He would need permission from the federal government, however, as a ban on U.S. citizens traveling to North Korea went into effect in September.

Featured image is from The Carter Center / Facebook.

The original source of this article is The Anti-Media
Copyright © James Holbrooks, The Anti-Media, 2017

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: James Holbrooks

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca