If the PT's base was aware of the military-strategic dynamics that forced Russia to commence its special operation as a last resort for defending the integrity of its national security red lines in Ukraine after NATO clandestinely crossed them there, then they'd be against Lula's political support of Kiev. It would thus be self-evident to them that he's placing Brazil on a US-aligned grand strategic trajectory in the New Cold War, which could lead to them publicly pressuring him en masse to change his policy.

Brazilian President Lula proved that his recalibrated worldview in recent years is a lot more closely aligned with the US' than ever after downplaying the causes of the NATO-Russian proxy war. According to him, "In the 21st century, it shouldn't be possible that we have war over small things", which he uttered after declaring that he won't visit either Russia or Ukraine due to the special operation. This position serves as further proof that he endorses the US' narrative about the conflict.

Lula previously condemned Russia in a joint statement with Biden during his trip to DC in early February, after which Brazil voted in support of a fiercely anti-Russian UN Resolution demanding Moscow's full and immediate withdrawal without any preconditions from all the territory that Kiev claims as its own, which includes Crimea. Russian Permanent Representative to the UN Vasily Nebenzia reacted to the passing of that motion by describing it as pushing a "militaristic Russophobic line".

Removing any ambiguity about his government's stance, Lula then called Zelensky shortly afterwards to reaffirm that "Brazil defends Ukraine's territorial integrity". Despite these objectively existing and easily verifiable pieces of evidence documenting his political support of Russia's nemeses in Kiev, an intense information warfare campaign has been waged by forces allied with the ruling party to gaslight its base into falsely thinking that Lula isn't aligned with the US on this issue or others like Nicaragua.

Elite members of the Workers' Party (PT) fear that the rank and file might revolt upon becoming aware that their leader is moving Brazil closer to the US-led West's GoldenBillion than the Sino-Russo Entente or even the Global South of which it's apart amidst the impending trifurcation of International Relations. With a view towards preemptively averting the scenario of them publicly pressuring him en masse to change this grand strategic trajectory, they sought to manipulate their perceptions about Lula's policies.

This explains the intense information warfare campaign that's being waged against their minds at this pivotal point in the global systemic transition, which he himself is directly participating in upon downplaying the causes of the NATO-Russian proxy war in an attempt to justify his political support of Kiev. Lula wants his supporters to discount the evidence before their eyes and ears in favor of agreeing with the US' narrative that Russia supposedly "invaded" Ukraine for purely "imperialistic" purposes.

If the PT's base was aware of the military-strategic dynamics that forced Russia to commence its special operation as a last resort for defending the integrity of its national security red lines in Ukraine after NATO clandestinely crossed them there, then they'd be against his political support of Kiev. It would thus be self-evident to them that Lula is placing Brazil on a US-aligned grand strategic trajectory in the New Cold War, which could lead to them publicly pressuring him en masse to change his policy.

The following analyses explain the larger context within which the special operation is being waged:

- 26 March 2022: "Russia Is Waging an Existential Struggle in Defense of Its Independence & Sovereignty"

A summary of the abovementioned insight will now follow for the reader's convenience.

In brief, the US spent the preceding eight years between its successful Color Revolution in early 2014 and the start of the special operation in 2022 turning Ukraine into an anti-Russian bastion, the purpose of which was to degrade that targeted Great Power's strategic capabilities to defend itself from the US. This was to be done through a combination of Hybrid War means related to Kiev's support of information warfare- and terrorist-driven separatism as well as conventional ones connected to NATO.

The first half of this policy aimed to destabilize Russia from within through the cultivation of forces that could advance its "Balkanization" while the second intended to eventually employ biological weapons, clandestine NATO bases, and "missile defense" infrastructure to place it in a position of blackmail. The US envisaged forcing Russia into a never-ending series of unilateral concessions that would ultimately result in its geostrategic neutralization and thus facilitate the successful "containment" of China.

This plot to restore its declining unipolar hegemony was to begin with Kiev's NATO-supported reconquest of Donbass, which threatened to genocide that region's indigenous Russian population and ethically cleanse the survivors. That sequence of events was foiled by the special operation that was launched after President Putin realized that the West had no interest in discussing his country's security guarantee requests from December 2021 for politically resolving their security dilemma.

While the US prepared for the possibility of some kinetic response to its support of Kiev's imminent reconquest of Donbass, American policymakers hadn't calculated that President Putin would launch a preventive campaign across all of Ukraine to avert the impending scenario of Russia's strategic neutralization simultaneously with the preemptive one to stop the Donbass genocide. Had it been otherwise, then they'd have retooled the West's military-industrial complex well in advance.

This major miscalculation explains why the NATO chief admitted last month that his bloc is in a "race of logistics"/"war of attrition" with Russia, which wouldn't be the case if it truly expected a protracted conflict of this scale, nor would Kiev's forces be faring as badly as the Washington Post just revealed. President Putin regularly reminds everyone of the existential nature of this conflict, which places his decision to commence an interconnected preemptive-preventive campaign into context.

Returning to Lula's latest remarks that inspired this analysis, there's no doubt that he's well aware of these military-strategic dynamics that forced President Putin's hand, which thus means that he's deliberately downplaying them in order to manipulate his base. He can't claim ignorance after over a year of Russia explaining this at length, hence why it can now confidently be concluded that Lula politically aligned Brazil with the US in the most geostrategically significant conflict since World War II.
