

Michigan Election Results Update: Did Trump Really Win the State?

By Jessica McBride

Global Research, November 12, 2016

Heavy 12 November 2016

Region: USA

In-depth Report: U.S. Elections

Did Donald Trump really win Michigan's 16 electoral votes?

The president-elect's victory in the rust-belt state was heralded as a fundamental redrawing of the political map. That's because Michigan, along with Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, had not gone red in a presidential election since the 1980s. Until Tuesday, that is, according to the prevailing narrative.

However, you may have noticed that many news organizations still considered Michigan up for grabs in their electoral college maps of the presidential election as of November 11. That's three days after the election. In other words, they hadn't officially added it to Trump's column yet.

Thus, the answer to the question of whether Trump really won Michigan is:

He's ahead now.

A spokesman for the Secretary of State's office in Michigan told Heavy that office has "no reason to believe" there are "significant" numbers of votes somehow unaccounted for. However, Trump's lead is slender: He has a 13,107 vote lead over Hillary Clinton in Michigan, according to the latest totals from the Michigan Secretary of State's Office.

The reason many news organizations are hedging in declaring Trump the Michigan victor: The Associated Press has yet to call the race for Trump, and many news organizations follow the lead of the AP. The AP told Heavy on November 11 that it also hasn't called New Hampshire yet, although Hillary Clinton has a slight lead there. The wire service called Arizona on November 10 for Trump, two days after the election. All other states have been called.

"The races in New Hampshire and Michigan remain too close to call, with recounts possible in both states," Lauren Easton, media relations manager for the AP, explained to Heavy on November 11. "So long as recounts are possible, AP will not call either race."

Detroit newspapers have declared Trump the winner, attributing his victory to western, rural areas of the state populated by working class whites concerned about trade and jobs. Hillary Clinton also did not turn out Democratic voters in Michigan at Barack Obama's levels, and third-party candidates ran stronger than 2012.

Supporters of Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump are decked out in campaign signs before the rally in Michigan. His supporters often come dressed up for his rallies, wearing Trump accessories. (Getty)

So what's the hold up? The Michigan votes will now go through a canvassing system. The New York Times has a county-by-county listing of election results. As of November 11, the Times was giving Trump a 92 percent chance of winning Michigan; the results currently list Trump as receiving 47.6% of the vote and Clinton 47.3%.

Fred Woodhams, the spokesman for the Michigan Secretary of State's office, told Heavy, "We have no reason to believe that there are significant numbers of votes that are unaccounted for. All cities and townships in the state (1,500 of them) have reported unofficial vote totals." He said that no recount has been requested because recounts are filed after certified results are available, not unofficial tallies.

Clinton won the popular vote in the United States as a whole. Trump won the three rust-belt states that were crucial to his victory in the electoral college by a combined total of only about 112,000 votes.

The AP did call the election overall for Donald Trump, naming him as presidential victor, despite remaining unsure about Michigan and New Hampshire. Michigan has 16 electoral votes and New Hampshire 4. Clinton would not prevail in the electoral college even if she won Arizona and those two states:

The AP explains how it calls races, saying, "The responsibility for calling races rests with experienced journalists in each state. They are armed with on-the-ground knowledge of their territory that no other national news organization can match." In addition, says the AP, "On election night, race callers in each state are assisted by experts in AP's Washington bureau who examine exit poll numbers and votes as they are counted."

As of November 11, the Secretary of State in Michigan was reporting the following totals:

Trump: 2,277,914 Clinton: 2,264,807 Johnson: 172,726 Stein: 51,420 Castle: 16,125 Soltysik: 2,231

The Trump victory is too large to trigger an automatic recount in Michigan. A margin of under 2,000 votes triggers an automatic recount in Michigan, but candidates can seek a recount even if the margin is larger. You can learn more about the Michigan recount rules here:

https://www.scribd.com/document/330810338/Michigan-Recount#fullscreen&from_embed_

Woodhams told Heavy: "It's not for the Michigan Secretary of State's Office to get involved in when national media outlets 'call' a state. At this time, county boards of canvassers are verifying election results and will certify them. At the end of the month, the Michigan Board of State Canvassers will certify the results after the county boards complete their work. At that point, election results will be final."

Asked whether he expected the results to change substantially, he responded, "No, but in every election small vote shifts occur during the canvassing process."

Woodhams stressed that the canvassing process will by bi-partisan.

"The canvassing process takes weeks to complete to ensure that voters can have full confidence in the accuracy and integrity of Michigan elections," Woodhams said. "The canvassing boards are made up of equal numbers of Republicans and Democrats."

The Detroit Free Press reported in a blaring headline that Trump had won Michigan, giving the margin as 13,225 votes. However, the newspaper had earlier mistakenly called the race for Clinton based on an analysis of early returns from key precincts.

Jessica McBride is a Heavy contributor. She was a crime, government, and breaking news reporter for the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel and reporter for the Waukesha Freeman newspaper. Her award-winning work has appeared in numerous magazine, newspaper, and online publications. She has also appeared as a crime reporter on Investigation Discovery Channel, History Channel, and Oxygen Channel. She can be reached by email at jessica.mcbride@heavy.com.

The original source of this article is Heavy Copyright © Jessica McBride, Heavy, 2016

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Jessica McBride

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca