The American media announced without hesitation that "Bin Laden's DNA match made within hours", while recognizing that DNA test take several days "if not weeks". A categorical statement is asserted and then denied, but the denial is dismissed.

"First, on the scene, two women at the compound identified bin laden after he was killed. Second, when the Navy SEAL team got back to Jalalabad they measured his body. He was over six-feet-four inches tall.

Third, they conducted a computer facial recognition analysis, which concluded a 90 to 95 percent match.

In addition to a visual identification, officials also used facial recognition and DNA evidence to confirm Osama bin Laden's identity."

None of these DNA and facial recognition tests have been made public. The body has been thrown into the Indian Ocean.
