Dear Sir, RE 1949 GENEVA CONVENTIONS IV Articles 146 , 147, 148

I wish you to understand that I am not seeking a private prosecution of Mr Blair and others for grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions as I am not in a financial or legal position to do so.

My letter is to ask two questions.

1. Why is it that the UK as a High Contracting Party to the 1949 Geneva Convention IV has not yet initiated penal sanctions against those who have caused grave breaches of those conventions, and

2 . Why has the UK Government as High Contracting Party not yet initiated suppression of all acts contrary to the provision of the Convention (Article 146)?

As you will know failure to initiate such suppression may be considered as, in itself, a war crime. The most glaring example of this failure to suppress grave breaches has been the continued use of depleted uranium munitions in the joint enterprise of UK/USA to invade Iraq and the failure during the invasion, occupation, and post occupation to clear up radioactive depleted uranium material and debris as promised by the UK in 2003, and to suggest that the Interim Iraq Administration and the present Iraq Government are capable, and should have carried out such a clean up operation themselves. As you may know this failure has resulted in the spread of radioactive dust and widespread death by leukaemia and other cancers and the gross deformities of embryos in the Fallujah, Basra and Baghdad areas to such an extent that women in Fallujah were advised by Imams not to have children.

I enclose a petition signed by 7.800 showing concern at the lawless conduct of the Iraq War, also a series of short films called <chilcotreports> illustrating some, but by no means all, of the grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Convention IV.

I think you will agree that for future generations in this country and others upholding International Law is extremely important, quite apart from stemming infant mortality and misery in The Middle East, Afghanistan. and elsewhere by the continued use of extremely toxic munitions with widespread, long term, and severe damage to the natural environment.

Yours sincerely,

Nicholas Wood, Secretary BWCF
