

Ron Paul: The Two-Party US Political System Is in Reality a Monopoly

By RT

Global Research, November 05, 2014

RT

Region: USA

Ron Paul (Reuters/Robert Galbraith)

Former Congressman Ron Paul told RT in the midst of Tuesday's midterm elections that the "monopoly" system run by the leaders of the two main parties is all too evident as Americans go to the polls this Election Day.

"This whole idea that a good candidate that's rating well in the polls can't get in the debate, that's where the corruption really is," Paul, the 79-year-old former House of Representatives lawmaker for Texas, told RT during Tuesday's special midterm elections coverage. "It's a monopoly...and they don't even allow a second option," he said.

"If a third party person gets anywhere along, they are going to do everything they can to stop that from happening," the retired congressman continued.

Paul, a longtime Republican, has been critical of the two-party dichotomy that dominates American politics for decades, and once ran as the Libertarian Party's nominee for president of the United States. While third-party candidates continue to vie against the left and right establishment, however, Paul warned RT that even the two-party system as Americans know it is in danger.

"What do they do with our young people? They send them all around the world, getting involved in wars and telling them they have to have democratic elections," he told RT. "But here at home, we don't have true Democracy. We have a monopoly of ideas that is controlled by the leaders of two parties. And they call it two parties, but it's really one philosophy."

All hope isn't lost, however; according to Paul, American politics can still be changed if individuals intent on third-party ideas introduce their ethos to the current establishment. Americans can "fight to get rid of the monopoly of Republicans and Democrats," Paul said, or "try to influence people with ideas and infiltrate both political parties."

With respect to the midterm elections, though, Paul told RT that he's uncertain what policies will prevail this year — excluding, of course, an obvious win for the status quo.

"I think the status quo is pretty strong right now, and I imagine that the status quo is going to win the election tonight," he said Tuesday afternoon.

The original source of this article is RT
Copyright © RT, RT, 2014

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: RT

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca