

Russia to upgrade army in response to NATO expansion

By Global Research

Global Research, March 18, 2009

Russia Today 17 March 2009

Region: Russia and FSU

Theme: Militarization and WMD

President Medvedev has announced a programme of rearmament for Russia's military, starting in 2011. He says NATO expansion is one of the reasons which make the step necessary.

Speaking at a Defense Ministry meeting on Tuesday, Dmitry Medvedev said, "The analysis of the current political-military situation in the world shows that there still remain threats coming from local conflicts as well as from international terrorism.

"Attempts to expand the North Atlantic alliance close to the borders of our country have not been stopped. This is the reason why we should upgrade our military forces and make them more advanced," he said.

Read more

The President added that despite the current financial problems, "we have all the necessary capabilities".

The number of military practice manoeuvres carried out each year will also be increased.

"Many types of exercises have been held for the first time over a certain long period, or even in the entire history of the Armed Forces," Medvedev said. He added that the number of those exercises is still insufficient.

"Only exercises similar to real combat operations can enhance the skill and combat readiness of military units. This is something we should never hesitate to spend money on," said the President.

A smaller, better armed and more flexible armed force – that's what Russia needs to respond to growing threats from outside, according to Medvedev.

"There still remain the threats coming from local conflicts as well as from international terrorism. Attempts to expand NATO close to the borders of our country have not been stopped. All of this demands a new perspective and quality modernization for our armed forces," Medvedev noted during a media conference.

The eastward expansion of the military alliance is a principle concern for Russia. Even before the Baltic States joined NATO the alarm bells were ringing.

But the prospect of the former Soviet republics of Ukraine and Georgia gaining NATO membership is more than Moscow can bear.

“Medvedev just wanted to remind that NATO’s key purpose is to counter terrorism and not to enlarge and go further to the East,” commented Viktor Litovkin from the “Independent Military Review” newspaper.

To make matters worse, the U.S. is planning to install a missile shield in Eastern Europe, to which Russia is adamantly opposed.

Such a combination of factors motivated the Kremlin to modernize its forces and to advertise the fact that it was bulking up its deterrence.

“The primary goal is to improve the combat readiness of our troops – a substantial one, mainly in the area of strategic nuclear arms,” Medvedev pointed out.

The new administration in Washington has been sending broadly positive signals, saying it wishes to reset the bilateral relationship.

However, despite the goodwill, some analysts are skeptical the two sides will be able to compromise on the sharpest issues.

Medvedev is due to hold his first face-to-face meeting with Obama in London at the G20 summit at the beginning of April.

What was likely to be a complex dialogue has now been given an extra twist by Russia’s new military agenda.

The original source of this article is Russia Today
Copyright © Global Research, Russia Today, 2009

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Global Research

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long as the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca