Dear Readers,

With constant changes being made to the way search engines and social media reference and display articles from independent media, making sure we do everything in our power to keep our content as accessible to you as we can is a full time job. It's also a job we can't do on our own: we need your help!

Modifications to search engine algorithms often mean results from independent media get pushed down and out. This has an adverse effect on website traffic and, therefore, website revenue. Our content has always been free of charge and, with your help, we would like to keep it that way.

If you can see your way to making a financial contribution, large or small, to help us stay on course through these rough waters, we would be greatly indebted to you. Please consider making a one-time donation, a monthly recurring donation, becoming a Global Research member, or making a purchase from our online store.

By Oil Change International, August 31, 2018

Today, Canada's Federal Court of Appeal ruled that the Trans Mountain Expansion pipeline's Cabinet approval was fatally flawed in not one but two ways: in failing to properly consult Indigenous peoples and First Nations, and in failing to properly account for the full environmental impacts of the project by excluding the Trans Mountain Expansion's associated tanker traffic.

These activities have reportedly included the transfer of eight canisters of chlorine to a village near Jisr Al Shughur, an area under the control of Hayat Tahrir Ash Sham, an affiliate of the terrorist group Al Nusra. Crédit Suisse, like her bigger sister, UBS, have been amply punished already by Washington for facilitating in the US as well as in Switzerland tax evasion for US oligarchs. They want to be good boys now with Washington.
