Why Are Public Officials Protecting GMO and the Pesticides Industry? Digging Down into the Cesspool of Corruption

By Colin Todhunter, November 18 2016

The 'agrochemicals-agritech industry' should not be regarded as some kind of faceless concept because that lets individuals off the hook. It is run by identifiable individuals who sell health-and environment-damaging products, co-opt scientists, control public institutions and ensure farmers are kept on a chemical treadmill. From CEOs and scientists to public officials and media/PR spin doctors, specific individuals can be identified and at some stage should be hauled into court for what amounts to 'crimes against humanity'.

Google, Corporate Press Launch Attack On Alternative Media

By Brandon Turbeville, November 18 2016

The new Google policy and the intent to remove what is for many websites a main source of revenue has obvious political implications and is about much more than a desire to prevent unpleasant images, violence, and hate from being shown to Americans. That is, it is obvious that the intention of Google is to starve out the source of revenue for the alternative media, thereby crashing the alternative media as a competitor for mainstream outlets and eliminating any sources of critical thought and competing narratives.

Palestinians and their allies, meanwhile, are seeking an apology from Britain for an injustice whose impact is still felt today.

By Amy Benjamin, November 18 2016

I wish to offer a different analysis, one rooted in a paraphrase of a paraphrase of a biblical verse, and it goes like this: "Show me what your news source is, and I'll tell you who you are." You see, after fifty years of gestation, epistemological politics have finally and fully come of age. Election 2016 was their formal debut.
