RT: What exactly led you to the conclusion that the videos of the chemical attack were fabricated?

Mother Agnes Mariam el-Salib: I have been contacted by families from the province of Lattakia. They alleged that they discovered victims, the children that are presented as victims of the chemical attacks in Eastern Ghouta, would be their own children. They had asked me to interfere, so I had to study a little bit of those videos to see where those children are carried, because in some videos they are alive and in some videos they seem not to be alive.

I came to identify in many videos real staging, real screen playing and today after having redacted a study concerning my first impression, I called it a better version.

Today I'm just finishing the chronology of those videos and of the action they are unveiling to the public opinion. I'm more and more convinced that it is not the coverage of an ongoing reality, the ongoing emergency of chemical strikes, but a kind of screen playing with a script that has been worked on many days before.

RT: Are you an expert on chemical weapons and film-making?

MA: We see kind of manipulations of corpses. For example in an average timeframe between 2-5 hours we see bodies that are not cured that are not healed, we see them take them from one place to another. They put them in a scenography way just to make the shooting. These are not confirmed to what they are pretending – they are showing us as they say victims of an imminent chemical attack. So I have found a lot of screenplay and all of them, they are very well documented. We could derive from the web the real chronology, the real time frame of their uploading. And it is obvious, nobody can deny this.

An image grab taken from a video uploaded on YouTube by the Arbeen unified press office on August 21, 2013 shows a man comforting a Syrian girl in shock as she screams in Arabic “I am alive” following an attack in which Syrian opposition claim the regime used chemical weapons in eastern Ghouta, on the outskirts of Damascus (AFP Photo)

I'm not an expert, I'm not military, I'm not a medical expert – I am a just an observer, a normal citizen and as a nun I'm trying to find out what is the fate of those little children. If they are from the North, from Lattakia, I would like to know where they are. If they are not from North Lattakia, we also have the proof that they have no families.

So please tell us – those children are the children of whom? From where did you get them? Why are you using them and manipulating them? Are they alive or are they dead? Now it is a humanitarian case and we're asked to bring it to the highest level of the humanitarian and human rights community in the world.

RT: How did the UN respond to your findings?

MA: I said directly in a meeting with the commission of inquiry that I have been viewing the videos and that my impression was that they were a fake. They were very much interested. They've asked me to transmit to them the videos as well as my own observation.

Until today I have just transmitted to the commission of inquiry and also to the office of the high commissioner of human rights in Geneva my 50-page study. I did not transmit until today the videos because I wanted to be sure about my work and I will transmit to them, remit to them in an official way the whole work of chronology and evidences that they will be able to see, to view it in an audio-visual way.
