“Raymond Kurzweil is described in Wikipedia as “an American inventor and futurist. He is involved in fields such as optical character recognition, text-to-speech synthesis, speech recognition technology, and electronic keyboard instruments”

Ray Kurzweil doesn't have a God to honour. He has a machine, and he wants us all to shift to this digital version of the divine. He wants us to become super-computers in all but name. He calls it 'the singularity', a name with a quasi-religious ring to it. The singularity stands for 'the fusion of the real with the synthetic'.

Kurzweil sees this as a supreme act that will end the need for human evolution by transferring the meaning and purpose of life into a 'real-time' electro-digital encyclopedia composed of trillions of soulless electrical circuits that ape what we call 'knowledge'.

He's not alone in this way of thinking, there's Zuckerberg, Schwab, Musk and who knows who else. And then there's a whole trail of followers stretching out behind, all travelling the same way. Tens of millions, if not billions of them. They don't describe themselves as believers in 'the singularity', they simply worship the same digital totem and allow it to gradually take-over their lives - megabyte by megabyte, gigabyte by gigabyte - until they can no longer be described as human.

When you see people constantly looking downwards, you realise that they are metamorphosing into something less than human. Aspiration - the desire to grow, learn and be more than one is - is an upward moving action. The impulse of aspiration to a state of higher consciousness, is an upwardly rising movement. As a tree or flower reaches for the light, so do we humans.

But those seduced by their cell phones, I pods, tabs et al. always look down. Down into a place where the only light is the LED powered glow on the face of their appliance.

Slowly but surely humans are being transformed into that which they are addicted to. They are losing their ability to see and respond to the actual Light, their guiding angel and innate link with universal cosmic consciousness. They are losing their humanity. Their soul is being overridden, short-circuited, deleted.

Whenever one sits in front of a glowing screen one is the subject of hypnosis. One is subconsciously becoming reliant upon that which is the gateway technology into another world of being and perceiving: 'a virtual world'.

Kurzweil and those billions who adopt his fascination with a virtual existence, are placing a great burden on the rest of life. They are dead weight imposed upon living matter. They are the receivers and transmitters of distorted energy fields – and these fields pollute the natural vibratory fields responsible for the health and well being of all living matter.

People who only look down 'shed' their negative vibrations on others in their vicinity. This is a vibratory reality. And when coupled with the actual EMF radiation emanating from that to which they are addicted, the circadian rhythms of the biosphere are drowned-out by a pervasive electro smog.

The Schumann Resonance (7.86 Hertz) which maintains balance of the natural environment, including humans, wildlife and plant life, is pushed into the background, while the synthetic radiation frequencies beamed out from 3,4,5G towers and transmitters, become the predominant energy field.

A voltage field that is dispersed and accentuated by the little pocket time bombs that some 95% of those living and working in Western societies cannot bear to part company with.

But when your best friend is a machine you easily fall victim to its powers.

Man's love-affair with technology has intensified with each passing decade. There has always been a fascination with that which appears to make daily life more navigable and more 'convenient'.

But the price to be paid for the ever more high-tech and 'unrepairable' digitalised props of the modern age, is far too high. They cannot simply be dismissed as something 'one can't do without'.

Food, water, clothes, shelter and medicine belong in that category, but not convenience technologies that kill.

We humans are not machines. We have sensitive physical bodies, astoundingly brilliant brains and exquisite powers of perception and spirituality. The role of the machine is to support this condition, not to override it. To accentuate a creative 'human scale' sense of proportion and responsiveness in daily life.

Today's multifarious tech toys have been weaponised. They were born out of military research and development. They were conceived and designed as intentional weapons and surveillance tools, combined into one.

They come with no health warning, aside from some precautionary small print, less obvious than that associated with plastic toys. Children are urged to enter into long-term relationships with these toxic electro magnetic play things, and with the virtual worlds they draw their owners into – like moths to the flame. They are military accessories, sweetened and domesticated into tools of ‘friendly’ torture. Silent weapons seductively distorting the divine human condition.

Now we begin to see the dire results of having adopted such a blind degree of faith in the fake one-eyed god called ‘progress’, with its Faustian promise of taking us ever closer to the promised land of technological perfection. The transmutation of warm, spontaneous, creative human beings into sterile, soulless cyborgs.

That is the Kurzweil, Zuckerberg, Gates and Schwab agenda for the future of humanity; “genocide of the human soul”.

So guard your precious, responsive souls with your very life. Never let them be technologically enslaved. Give them the true breathing space they need to make themselves known to you.

For your soul alone knows the true direction to the Promised Land.
