Global Research, October 11, 2015

The 2015 Canadian federal election is right around the corner. On October 19, the incumbent Prime Minister, Stephen Harper, will either be voted out of power or re-elected by the Canadian populace.

There are good, bad, and ugly features in every political system. The prudent voter is aware of this reality. However, mainstream news in Canada does not incite prudence; a great deal of media outlets have omitted to mention the coverup and fraud instigated by the Conservative Party in the 2011 election, not to mention its complicity with the US war agenda in the Middle East. The Canadian media in this regard is in the business of concealing a corrupt system that merely buys and sells pseudo-politicians.

Global Research brings to the attention of its readers a selection of articles that highlight these examples of political corruption in the country.

The warning signs of abrupt climate disruption are evident to anyone willing to look...Given the gravity of the situation, and the stakes for humanity, Canada's policy on addressing the climate catastrophe warrants serious attention in the country's federal election. global dilemma that threatens the future of humanity.
