

The Ongoing Corruption Dossier at FIFA is Getting Thicker

Getting Blatter's Number Two: The Travails of Jérôme Valcke

By Dr. Binoy Kampmark

Global Research, September 19, 2015

Corruption is conditioning. In the world's most notable mafia sporting organisation, it should barely register a shock that FIFA's Secretary General has been fiddling with tickets. To be precise, Jérôme Valcke is said to have been involved in email traffic with former Israeli footballer Benny Alon which speak of the sale of 8,750 tickets for 24 top notch matches at the Brazil World Cup. Such a procedure would have been in breach of FIFA's own ticketing rules.

Alon, who has buttered his bread as a ticketing and hospitality agent since 1990, was forthcoming to the Daily Mail. Presumably the prosecution bonanza regarding FIFA executives had triggered his interest. "I told him that we'd like tickets to three Germany matches, and all the matches Brazilian might play." From these games, so called "the crème de la crème" assortment, "we could make a good amount of money from selling these tickets". Both, Alon alleges, would then split the profit. The tickets would initially go to Alon's JB Sports Marketing (JBSM).

Having taken a good dump on Valcke, Alon then reiterated that the deal did not eventuate, as Valcke requested that, "as a favour" it might be cancelled as FIFA already had a ticketing arrangement with Match, a different company. In fact, Valcke shows an awareness that such arrangements would be rather smelly. Avoid, he cautions to Alon, asking too many people's advice on it. "It is very serious," writes Valcke. "Just do it, if I may say using a slogan from one company involved. All is clear and has to be finalised now."

As the Independent points out, an eight month period seems to have elapsed between the point Valcke shows knowledge about the arrangement of the tickets being sold at such inflated prices, and the withdrawal of the deal. This by no means is the end of it, and the email exchanges point to failed meetings over money transactions that did not eventuate.

Valcke found himself in the rather dense woods of FIFA corruption when his name was found at the end of an email licensing a $10m payment to the Caribbean Football Union for a so-called "African Diaspora Legacy Programme". The money would come from FIFA's coffers, and was linked to the South Africa World Cup. So far, he has been spared the grief given many of his colleagues.

FIFA's own brief statement on the subject of the Alon-Valcke affair was brief. Valcke had "been put on leave and released from his duties effective immediately until further notice. FIFA has been made aware of a series of allegations involving the secretary-general and has requested a formal investigation by the FIFA Ethics Committee."

Region: Europe, USA

Theme: Law and Justice

The FIFA corruption dossier is getting thicker as the assortment of US and Swiss authorities get deeper to the labyrinthine structure of deals and "understandings" that characterise the organisation. Even those touted as being potential brooms for the task of cleaning up the organisation in a post-Blatter sweep have been arrested. Jeffrey Webb of the Cayman Islands, a FIFA vice president, was one such character. In FIFA, even the brooms tend to be very used.

The wheels of prosecution are also turning in the extradition stakes. This week, the Swiss Federal Office of Justice approved the extradition request of another former FIFA vice-president Eugenio Figueredo to the United States to face corruption charges relating to the sale of marketing rights covering the Copa América tournaments in 2015, 2016, 2019 and 2023.[1] He had formerly been president of the South American confederation Conmebol.

On Monday, US Attorney-General Loretta Lynch, who has shown a terrier-like disposition in the effort to bring the organisation to book, promised that the number of arrests would balloon, depending on the trail of evidence. These would add to the number from May 27 when FIFA executives were dramatically marched out their hotel in Zurich in a dawn raid. But the emperor in question, that biggest of fish Sepp Blatter, is not necessarily on that list.

Any prosecution would be incomplete without bringing the leader of the entire organisation into the fold. Scouring 11 terabytes of information is a tall order – and that's just the amount of material seized by the Swiss authorities. Blatter has every reason to fear going to the North Americas. Lynch has so far resisted dropping his name into the prosecutor's mix. "I'm not going to comment on individuals and I am not able to give you information about Mr Blatter's travel plans."

Dr. Binoy Kampmark was a Commonwealth Scholar at Selwyn College, Cambridge. He lectures at RMIT University, Melbourne. Email: bkampmark@gmail.com

Notes

[1]

 $\frac{\text{http://www.theguardian.com/football/2015/sep/17/fifa-corruption-suspect-eugenio-figueredo-extradition}{\text{on}}$

The original source of this article is Global Research Copyright © Dr. Binoy Kampmark, Global Research, 2015

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Dr. Binoy

Kampmark

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca