

VIDEO: US Media on Gaddafi - In Praise of Lynching

By Global Research

Global Research, October 26, 2011

RT 26 October 2011

Region: Middle East & North Africa

Theme: Media Disinformation, US NATO
War Agenda

In-depth Report: NATO'S WAR ON LIBYA

American newspapers carry front-page news of Gaddafi's death

The mainstream US media has reacted to Muammar Gaddafi's brutal lynching with a tidal wave of cheers and approval, trumpeting the Colonel's death as the start of a new era for Libya.

US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton led the triumphant celebrations of Gaddafi's death with her immortal line, "We came, we saw, he died!" – words which are sure to be remembered far beyond America's shores.

Joy at the killing of the killing of the African leader spread like wildfire through the US media.

"It cost us a trillion dollars to get Saddam and a billion dollars to get Gaddafi," remarked television host Bill Maher.

"And Libya says they're going to pay back the billion that we spent, too. So it's going to end up being sort of free for nothing," cheered the host of MSNBC's The Rachel Maddow Show.

Senator Lindsey Graham gave it to us straight:

"Let's get in on the ground, there is a lot of money to be made in the future in Libya, there is a lot of oil to be produced," he said.

Not a single American soldier killed and great opportunities ahead – it seems like the perfect new warfare, and one that serves as a sharp lesson to others.

"I think it sends an important message to other leaders in the region," lectured a CNN commentator.

"Boy, I tell you, these Arab dictators – they're not very original. Just like Saddam Hussein, caught him in a hole," sneered Bill Maher.

"Muammar Gaddafi was a bad guy," Fox concluded.

Although many Libyans would argue whether he was really so bad, considering what Gaddafi did for the country's social welfare and women's rights, in the eyes of the US media, he was the ultimate evil.

"It is a demonization, every step of the way, against Gaddafi. In the media today always one man, one leader of a country, becomes a justification for destroying an entire country," acknowledged Sara Flounders, member of the Workers World Party.

For a few days, the media savored the bloody images of Gaddafi's killing and laughed at similarities between his capture in a ditch and that of Saddam Hussein.

In the eyes of the American public, the celebration of Gaddafi's killing effectively erases the bad taste left by the NATO campaign – no mention of Libyan civilians killed in NATO strikes, not much talk about the destruction to the country caused by those strikes. Gaddafi's killing is presented as a triumph, creating a perception that somehow it is perfectly OK to invade a country and help its leader be lynched. But if it is presented as such a success – doesn't it become more tempting to try the same methods somewhere else?

The original source of this article is RT Copyright © Global Research, RT, 2011

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Global Research

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca