

Violence is As American As Cherry Pie

By Barbara Nimri Aziz

Global Research, March 18, 2012

18 March 2012

Region: USA

Theme: History

Cherry Pie is a much loved American dessert. For most Americans cherry pie conjures up warm feelings of a bountiful family dinner followed by a slice of pie oozing red cherry syrup topped with a scoop of ice cream. Thus the poignancy of the maxim—"Violence is As American As Cherry Pie". Some of us will remember and will understand this adage.

This was H Rap Brown's (Jamil Abdallah Al-Amin) cogent summation of American culture 45 years ago. I remember it often—too often, reading the daily news.

Today 'Violence is as American as Cherry Pie' describes the massacre of 16 Afghans by an American serving his great superpower nation abroad.

Yesterday it was a knife attack at an employment center, the day before that a shooting at a college, before that a bombing of shepherd boys in a far away mountainside, and before that US drone attacks on another foreign mountainside, then shootings in a neighborhood home in Ohio, a school, a military base, outside a courtroom.

It goes on and on, and on, daily in the US and wherever US military personnel and their killing machines are at work, "protecting" America and Americans across the world. The toll escapes us, as we move swiftly from headline to headline.

H. Rap Brown was Black Panther leader and chair of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee in the 1960s. An articulate outspoken critic of American culture, he eventually became Jamil Al-Amin, settling in Atlanta Georgia. There he devoted himself to Islam and community service "reforming people's lives and improving the community through this Divine program." (In 2000, al-Amin was sent to prison for a murder for which many believe he was falsely accused.

H. Rap Brown's saying came back to claim him as it continues to take so many of our Black American leaders. (Many maintain Al-Amin is a political prisoner whose real crime was "guiding others to Islam". In May 2004, after Iraq's Abu Graib prison revelations, in a published message Al-Amin writes "mistreatment in Iraqi prisons is only the tip of the iceberg and that Muslims in prisons inside the US 'have been similarly trampled'. He emphasized that such misbehavior must be put within its context: It is an attempt to break Muslims, to strip them of their humanity and to trash their identity, dignity and self-respect.

News headlines this past week pass over the violence in neighborhoods across the US to tell us of a deranged soldier—a lone gunman—as if this soldier himself is a victim of the war he served so gallantly.

The murder of Afghans that he reportedly single-handedly carried out is becoming a story of the mental problems experienced by our trained professional killers and a debate about when and how the US should leave Afghanistan.

Would that this event is understood as a 'condition' of American culture: "As American as Cherry Pie". T he problem is not in an army unit gone mad or in a military occupation.

It lies deep within US culture—the games children play, the language they use, the design of their cars, the books they read and the songs they sing.

Across the world, people understand this. Those biting into their cherry pie or watching the Baghdad sky "light up like a Christmas tree" cannot, alas.

March 15, 2012 by B. Nimri Aziz now also posted on www.RadioTahrir.org blog

The original source of this article is Global Research
Copyright © Barbara Nimri Aziz, Global Research, 2012

---

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Barbara Nimri Aziz

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca

www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca