

Whose Police State? Media Focus on Right to Bear Arms, Ignores Search and Seizure Abuse

By Josmar Trujillo

Global Research, May 02, 2013

FAIR 1 May 2013

Region: USA

Theme: Media Disinformation

The aggressive tactics of law enforcement, an ongoing controversy in communities of color, have recently come into the national media spotlight—if briefly—as the constitutionally dubious practice of arbitrarily stopping and frisking (mostly black and Latino) citizens by police officers was put on trial in federal court in March (NPR, 3/21/13). But you would be hard pressed to know much about the issues if you get your news from national mainstream television.

When it comes to conversations about citizens' rights, the lion's share of coverage has gone to perceived infringements on constitutional rights that are of concern mostly to white Americans—like gun ownership.

When the Sandy Hook massacre put gun control back into the national conversation, the debate over personal gun ownership rights undoubtedly resonated predominantly with their disproportionately white (and conservative) supporters (Pew Research Center, 1/13). The passions that arise over gun control were on display when Internet radio host Alex Jones (Extra!, 2/11) argued on CNN's Piers Morgan Tonight (1/7/13) that gun control represents a "police state."

The fact is that many Americans feel that they are living in a police state (Raw Story, 3/6/13; CounterPunch, 2/8/13)—but few get a platform to talk about it. One can only imagine the national dialogue on racial profiling and violations of the Fourth Amendment—protecting individuals against "unreasonable searches and seizures"—if national media paid attention to those who passionately oppose stop and frisk (Extra!, 3/12).

Though stop and frisk is seen by many as just as much a constitutional issue as the right to bear arms, a scan of TV coverage between January and March of this year found only 26 mentions of it on the three major cable outlets CNN, Fox and MSNBC (most on MSNBC), and just three mentions on the networks ABC, NBC and CBS. During this time period, a federal judge ruled part of the New York Police Department's policy unconstitutional (New York Times, 1/9/13), Oakland's proposal to hire former NYPD commissioner William Bratton—a prominent stop-and-frisk proponent—got a huge public pushback (Colorlines, 1/23/13), and the major federal case against stop and frisk got underway.

Over the same period, broadcast networks ABC, NBC and CBS mentioned "gun control," "gun rights" or "Second Amendment" 350 times; these were brought up almost 1,700 times on cable outlets CNN, Fox News and MSNBC.

But it's not just a numbers issue; it's also content. Of the three network mentions of stop and frisk, one (CBS News, 1/24/13) focused on a call for more aggressive policing in Oakland—despite an ugly history of police brutality and racial profiling (Colorlines, 7/7/12)—and mostly ignored the mounting local opposition to police tactics (Wall Street Journal, 1/23/13).

More egregiously, another CBS story (1/23/13) misrepresented one black activist's impassioned speech at an Oakland City Council hearing, misleadingly portraying her fear of police abuse as “fear of gun violence,” to frame its narrative of a fearful town in need of a supercop like Bratton. After the activist publicly decried the network's “slandorous attempt to use my passion to sell the very thing I am opposed to” (Political Fail Blog, 1/24/13), CBS added an editor's note to the online version of the story—but made no on-air correction.

Finally, on ABC's This Week (2/24/13), conservative George Will pointed to stop and frisk as an effective strategy to control gun violence without impeding Second Amendment rights—even if it meant violating the Fourth Amendment rights of those the police frisk.

So why the discrepancy in coverage? One might argue that it is precisely because these are issues that predominantly affect and concern blacks and Latinos in America. In Manufacturing Consent, Edward Herman and Noam Chomsky wrote of “worthy” and “unworthy” victims when analyzing the mainstream media's Cold War coverage. When applied domestically, it's hard not to see those concepts mapping onto race and ethnicity. Studies suggest there is already a media bias when covering missing children of different races (Communication Research Reports, 9/10).

Eventually it becomes clear that even when communities of color get the majority of attention of police officers, their stories will be given a minority of coverage by corporate media.

The original source of this article is FAIR
Copyright © Josmar Trujillo, FAIR, 2013

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Josmar Trujillo

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of “fair use” in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca